Ladies Only

Most ladies have heard the cynical male joke about the female driver, who replied when informed by a mechanic that her engine was "missing": "Well that's certainly strange. I've sure it was there when I drove in a few minutes ago!"

For the benefit of gals who would like to bandy technical terms with the experts, here is a glossary of definitions that is bound to impress the most prejudiced mechanic, not to mention their own special male authority.

MOTOR MISSING: usually spark plugs too wide or fouled...weak coil or condenser...weak breaker points or springs. HARD STARTING: could be weak battery...moisture on spark plugs or in distributor...faulty battery cable or ground connection...weak coil or condenser...spark plugs worn out or dirty...carburetor needs cleaning or adjusting.

FOR POOR GAS MILEAGE check: defective carburetor...valves need grinding...spark plugs need cleaning, adjusting or replacing. SHAKY STEERING can be caused by faulty front wheel alignment or balance...loose connecting rods...defective steering gear. If your car RUNS HOT, check for a defective water pump...cooling system, thermostat or fan belt...low radiator level...sparse fuel air mixture. MOTOR KNOCK low octane fuel...excessive combustion chamber deposits...overheated engine.

Our mechanics will be pleased to reward your interest with an explanation of your car's none, to honestly tell you so. Over the years, many of our highest-valued trades have come from women with an intelligent interest in improving the performance and worth of their cars.

THE CANOE

Challenged by many breakthroughs in boating since its birth among prehistoric lake dwellers in Europe, the canoe has remained as a much-used means of travel on lakes and streams. Once indispensable to Michigan's early Indians, explorers, and fur traders, it is now riding the crest of popularity among thousands of recreationists who ply the state's waters each year. The canoe almost certainly made its way to our Western Hemisphere from Asia long before Columbus set foot in this country. Its shape and design are virtually the same as they were thousands of years ago. Today's popular metal canoe is modeled after the birch-bark hunting canoe used by the Great Lakes Chippewa Indians. It is light, rugged, and unsinkable and requires little upkeep. —Mich. Dept. of Conservation

LANSING — Watercraft of legend, history and interest for all outdoorsmen; a vessel whose shape and design today is virtually the same as thousands of years ago; a weapon of war, also indispensable in the peaceful needs of primitive peoples throughout the world; a modern relic; a frail, easily broken craft, yet capable of carrying thirty times its own weight.

This is the canoe which today has as secure a future as its past is distinctive.

Just where and when the canoe idea was hatched is unknown. Where the first canoes were made is unknown. The material used in their construction is unknown. Perhaps in our foggy human beginnings, the canoe idea occurred many times, to many primitive men, scattered over the globe and the centuries.

In any case, the earliest known canoes were dugouts, used by pre-historic lake dwellers in Europe. Somewhat later, the Egyptians used the canoe idea in their very early papyrus boats, papyrus being a reedy, hollow-stemmed plant from which early paper was made. Chinese records of 2000 B. C. carry the notion that all boat types derive from the log dugout. Greeks and Romans in the centuries near the birth of Christ followed the Egyptian "ark" idea, and these vessels, again, were basically canoes.

But while the earliest examples are found in Europe, the canoe almost certainly came to our Western Hemisphere from Asia during the early Mongolian migrations from Siberia, through the Bering Sea into Alaska, and thence southward into the North, Central and South America.

These migrations occurred probably 200 centuries before Columbus scudded in front of his west-ward into the Caribbean, and by the time the Great Discoverer arrived in 1492, canoe types apparently were everywhere in this hemisphere, from the Arctic north to Tierra del Fuego in southernmost South America.

People in the Great Lakes area have grown accustomed to the Chippewa birch-bark canoe as a prototype, at least a model, for all canoes. But around the world and over the centuries, canoes have been built from all manner of trees, tree trunks, leaf bundles, and skins, and the size may vary from a one-man shell less than ten feet long to a double log dug-out up to 100 feet long, capable of carrying several dozen men. And in its heyday, the Great Lakes Chippewa canoe itself knew many variations of size and shape.

There were, for example, the two general sizes in use by the Indians. These were, first, the 15-foot family or hunting canoe from which our popular metal canoes of today have been designed, and second, a larger size of this birch-bark canoe which was used for freighting and for carrying war parties across the Great Lakes or other large bodies of open water.

The family or hunting canoe was the most popular with the Great Lakes Indians because it portaged easily, one man could handle it, it was easiest to build, it could be loaded heavily, and it needed but a few inches of water to float.

The bigger canoe, on the other hand, served the Iroquois and the Chippewa in their battles along the Great Lakes. Some of these birch-bark boats held fifty or more warriors, had higher sides and were much longer, possibly 35 to 45 feet.

Whatever its length, this canoe later became prime transportation for the Voyageurs, and though they did not originate this large craft, their name is nonetheless applied to this boat. Now and then, a drawing or early writing turns up indicating the Voyageur canoes had a very tall, new-moon shaped prow, sometimes ornamented with tassels or paintings.

Construction of a birch-bark canoe was a long and rather arduous task. In one recorded instance, it took two men thirteen days to construct one. In another record breaker reminiscent of shipbuilding days in World War II, 16 Menominee Indians sewed the bark on a canoe frame in one day. Gathering the materials was in itself a lengthy task. Only the straightest, biggest, white birch trees were chosen for bark. Jack pine roots were used for sewing. White cedar provided prows, gunwales, ribs, and flooring. And the final construction went something like this:

A level open spot of ground was found, and a very shallow depression, about the shape of a canoe bottom, was made. Poles were driven along the edges of this depression, slanting outward like the ribs of a ship. The bark was placed in this cradle, smooth side out, and the interior framework was developed inside this curving piece of bark. The poles that were driven in the ground helped hold the bark in the canoe shape while the interior flooring, sides, and end pieces were inserted and sewed into place.

Much of this framing was pre-constructed, so that once the final building began, it could be done rapidly. The bark was kept water-soaked, making it pliable enough to take the necessary shape. After it dried, however, it kept this shape, being then too brittle to be reformed. Side and end pieces of bark were sewed onto this bottom piece of bark as necessary and cedar stripping sewed along the gunwales.

Of course the coming of civilization pretty much put an end to canoe construction among the Indians. Gradually, the Indian found that hunting, fishing, and trapping were not the only ways to make a living. The fur trade lay, too, and the Indians helped hold the bark in the canoe shape while the interior flooring, sides, and end pieces were inserted and sewed into place.

Roads provided other means of transportation. For a time, the canoe must have known some dark days.

Then after a time, the white man began to build his own canoes, not of bark, but of wood and canvas, and finally, in the early 1940's, the metal canoe made its appearance. And the story of its popularity is known to anyone who now travels our northern waterways. It has most of the advantages of the Indian canoe, with few of the disadvantages. It is light, and tough and with air compartments, unsinkable. It can take all sorts of bangs when running rapids. It needs little patching, painting or repair from year to year and it can stand out in the weather indefinitely.

And finally, though this metal canoe lacks much of the beauty and delicacy of the Indian bark canoe, it nonetheless carries in its design centuries of historical development — a development that came from so-called primitive peoples and has been little improved upon by modern man.

What Course, Labor? . . .

As time approaches for renewal of labor contracts in various industries, the prospect of another nationwide wave of wage increases raises questions of the most serious proportions. During the past year the public became aware for the first time that the United States is in an impregnable economic fortress. The outflow of gold and foreign competition became common topics of conversation. On top of this, the specter of technological unemployment as a result of automation has been argued from all sides. Protracted strikes and another round of enforced wage increases in key industries could deal a devastating blow to hopes for steady employment and industrial expansion. So what course will union officials set now for their millions of members?

The June issue of Nation's Business contains an interesting report. It indicates that the top spokesmen of organized labor are going to push for a shorter workweek. President Kennedy opposes such a step on the ground that the traditional 40-hour week is necessary, we are to continue economic growth and maintain commitments at home and abroad.

The labor spokesmen, and those who agree with them, argue that if everybody works fewer hours there will be more jobs to go around. Congressman Powell of New York, Chairman of the House Committee on Education and Labor says, "We have to meet automation in a 32-hour week." He has introduced a bill to cut the basic workweek from 40 to 37 1/2 hours in two years, and 35 hours in four years. For work beyond the basic week, workers would be paid time-and-a-half. There will be extremists on both sides of the controversy. The story is on the side of an eventual shorter workweek. Nation's Business points out, "The workweek has dropped from some 70 hours 100 years ago to 40 hours today — an average of three hours per decade. If the average reduction were to be projected into the future, men would be working only 10 hours a week 100 years from now, one hour 30 years later, and would not have to work at all after that. Obviously, this is absurd."

One thing is certain, the shorter workweek cannot be paid for without hurting the economy except by increasing production efficiency, so that we can produce in a shorter period what we now produce in forty hours. It is just a matter of arithmetic. Again, in the words of Nation's Business, "If 40 hours in wages are paid for only 32 hours of production, workers will have the same amount of money to spend but they will be producing fewer goods and services. Prices will rise and inflation will make the gain imaginary."

"A shorter workweek cannot be taken out of profits. Profits are needed to provide improvements in plant and equipment which help create jobs. . . If output per man-hour continues to rise as it has since the war, it will take eight years before we are able to produce in 32 hours what we now produce in 40."

Union economists themselves are not unanimous in agreeing that a shorter workweek is a desirable goal at this time for organized labor.

An official of the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers Union says, "We may gain on employment through the shortening of hours, but within two years it would have little effect on the unemployment situation." This official's view is shared by other union spokesmen.

If unions won their objective of fewer hours with no loss in take-home pay, increased labor costs would encourage further automation and further unemployment. A shorter workweek enforced either by law or union contract might also cause a spread of "moonlighting", the practice of taking second jobs.

One thing is certain, neither labor, management nor consumers can afford a repetition now of the disastrous tie-ups in major industries such as has happened in the past in automobiles and steel.

From where I sit... by Joe Marsh

"Lost And Found, Found, Found, Found!"

I ran one of the most important "Lost and Found" advertisements in Clarion history for the Widow Parker last week. Since she lost her purse with $8 in it at the last town meeting, we figured it would mean a lot to her if it were found and returned.

Well, the ad ran and the strangest thing happened! We received four envelopes—from Buck Hansen, Windy Taylor, Curly Rice and Slim Thomas. Each envelope contained a note saying the enclosed money was found in or around Town Hall. We returned the lost money with 800% interest!

From where I sit, people are pretty wonderful. For instance, my neighbor always has a cold glass of beer on hand when he invites me over for dinner—though he prefers tea with his meals and has for years. His gesture is not only generous but tolerant, too... both are valuable assets to be "found" in any community.

By ARTHUR GODFREY
 Honorary Education Chairman of the American Cancer Society's 1961 Crusade

Back Cancer Research

I AM fascinated by figures. One of my favorite forms of relaxation is to tackle mathematical problems.

Since my operation for cancer two years ago, I have become very conscious of cancer statistics because I am one.

Let's consider what would happen to six persons who get cancer today. Numbers 1 and 2 will be saved. Number 3 will die, but might have been saved had proper treatment been received in time. Numbers 4, 5 and 6 will die of cancer because research has not yet come up with methods of controlling their cancers.

Number 3 should be the first target of all because something can be done now about him. Saving number 3 would mean the saving of an additional 85,000 lives a year, bringing the total of those saved from cancer each year up to 255,000.

Numbers 4, 5, and 6 should be our second target. And here, too, we can do something today. The American Cancer Society has more requests for funds for worthwhile research projects than it can support. Thus, research is being held back. I am not one to take away any one's pleasures, but this fact interests me: In 1959, the public voluntarily gave $32,000,000 to cancer control, while it voluntarily spent 300 times as much, or $9,600,000,000 on alcoholic beverages.

Arthur Godfrey

Where Do The Kids Go In The Summer When School Is Out

WHERE DO THE KIDS that crowd our schools go in the summer?

A silly question? Maybe, but one that should mean much to any citizen, parent or not, who has stopped to contemplate the tremendous job it is to provide recreation facilities for youngsters.

A really great many youngsters flock to the playgrounds, swimming pools and libraries provided by villages, townships, cities, counties and the state of Michigan.

Recreation, like almost every other facet of modern-day life, has become big business.

Therefore, it has big problems. Overstrict and complicated child labor laws make it difficult or impossible for boys and girls to get even menial summer jobs. Kids who are old enough want to play ball. They want to swim, and do handicraft work. The younger ones want play equipment to climb, slide one, jump over and occasionally fall off of.

Generally, municipal units of government carry the biggest load in the struggle to provide adequate recreation. And generally, they do a good job.

The Recreation Association of Michigan, an affiliate of the Michigan Municipal League, is one of the groups that provides a place where recreation officials can exchange ideas about the complex problems of setting up programs.

While it won't take effect until 1963, it is almost certain to be changed in more than one respect before it even becomes operative, it could prove to be the most far-reaching step in many a year.
